Interview Questions:
2 interviews conducted:

User-level:
How much experience do you have with investing?

Response 1: I am pretty decent at investing. I put money into cryptocurrency and ETFs, but that's about it, really. I occasionally put money into stocks too. So, I would say I am fairly experienced, relative to other people.

Response 2: I would say I am good at investing. I've been doing it for a few years now through RBC. I mostly stick with ETFs and stocks, but lately, I've been experimenting with options to get a better feel for how they work. I read and study whenever I am bored and feel like it.

What apps or tools do you currently use to manage your portfolio?

Response 1: I only use Wealthsimple. I haven't tried anything else for my investments.
Response 2: I mostly use RBC since everything I need is there.

Do you invest in different economies? Or do you stay within your own?

Response 1: I have invested into the Canadian and American markets only. Mostly within my own though.
Response 2: Mostly North America. I'd like to branch out more some day, but not right now.

Do you feel that the tools you use give you detailed understanding of your portfolio? For example, how many currencies you've invested with and what percentage of your portfolio is invested in different countries.

Response 1: Honestly, I think it gives me enough for the level I am at right now. I am decent at it, once again, so it's alright I think. If I were to get deeper into investing, like maybe take it more seriously, I would probably use a different app because then it wouldn't be enough.
Response 2: For the most part, yeah, RBC gives me a decent overview, but sometimes I wish it broke down things a bit more, like clearer visuals or performance by sector.

What challenges do you run into when trying to see how diverse your portfolio is?

Response 1: I see numbers only, really. It's given to me in USD, CAD, whatever else, but I can't really get a summation or conversion of it into Canadian dollars just by looking at it. So, I would probably say it's hard to actually get a deep intuitive understanding of it just by reading the numbers.

Response 2: It's hard to get the full picture of things, I think. You have to do a lot of self-learning and understanding.

Do you find that you concentrate your investments in one region?

Response 1: Yes, I do. It is slightly intentional though.
Response 2: Yeah, like I said, mostly North America. It's just much easier that way for me.

What are some concepts about investing you wish to learn about?

Response 1: Options are the biggest thing to me right now. I want to know more about options trading.
Response 2: I've studied a good bit, so I think rather than learning about new things, I want to get better at connecting trends, like how market volatility affects pricing.

Do you find visual tools to help you understand numbers better?

Response 1: Yeah, absolutely. I am a visual learner.
Response 2: Yeah, for sure. Visual tools are great. I am a mathy girl but I like visuals along with it.

Do you find gamified features help you stay motivated? For example, leaderboards and badges.

Response 1: Kind of? I think for games that give you ranks and what-not motivate me. Otherwise, for educational purposes, no, unless it comes with a real tangible reward.
Response 2: No, but I think it's fun sometimes. I'm more motivated by seeing progress.

If there was one feature you wish your current investment app used, what would it be?

Response 1: I wish it explained every single acronym and numbers. On wealthsimple, you can view the numerical details of a company, but I don't really know what it means.
Response 2: I wish it had a built-in hover-y tool so I can see definitions, because I forget sometimes.